Discritional Department Tells Why
It Mask Withdray Appropriations.

High and graded school funds are being sent out by the Department of Publ'e Instruction to local officials throughout the State. Therewith some kicks are registered, and some reasons given for reducing or abandoning certain appropriations.
Superintendent Eggleston says in this connection:

"During the winter the department has made the most comprehensive and thorough study of the high and graded school situation in the State ever attempted. This study has disclosed in some instances a state of affairs that has compelled us to reduce or withdraw appropriations. We have three major complaints to register against many schools and districts. Nearly three months were consumed in getting in reports which could easily have been prepared, revised and dispatched in twenty days.

An immense amount of valuable time was lost by reason of the fact that the department was obliged to return so many reports for correction. In soile instances school boards have to them,"

Further troubles which the department encounters are as follows:
"I. A high school is established in a county or district which has had no high school in the past. That new school must receive assistance from the high school fund or the whole spirit of the act will be dispersed. whole spi whole spirit of the act will be disregarded.

"2. By annexation or loss of revenue a rich district sometimes becomes poor. We must come to its aid, at least temporarily, or the school system of the district will be wrecked.

"The department," says Mr. Eggleston, "tries to avoid reducing appropriations in all cases unless the district seems to have plenty of money; it labors carnestly to live up to the opinions or representations or promises made by representatives of the department, but aside from the fact that in all public matters it is impossible for any one to mortgage the future, the Department of Public Instruction must consider the number of high schools in a district, the number in the county, the wealth of the latrict, the condition of houses and school grounds, the amount of money given by private subscription, the character of the school buildings, and then do the best it can with a limited amount of money."
